The Pricing of European Options with Stochastic Volatility Model

MiJin Ha and Junhui U

1) Department of Mathematics, Pusan National University, Pusan, KOREA

ABSTRACT

Pricing derivatives in an environment of uncertain and changing market volatility is considered as an important problem because a constant volatility parameter is no longer sufficient to capture modern market phenomena. In this talk, we will review recent research on mathematical finance such as stochastic volatility models, asymptotic analysis for pricing European derivatives.